STAMFORD, Conn., Jun 10, 2003 /PRNewswire via COMTEX/ -- Bywater Corporate Development Services (CDS), a management advisory practice specializing in middle-market acquisitions, divestitures, and financing, announced that it has completed the sale of Master Lubricants Company to Acrotech Industries Inc.

Westville, New Jersey-based Master Lubricants sold its assets, including the Lubriko and Moly-XL brand names, to Dynamic Industrial Group, a holding company created by Acrotech owners specifically for the transaction. Production operations, including equipment, will be transferred to Acrotech's plant in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. The Lubriko and Moly-XL brands, which have been in the marketplace for more than 100 years, were Master Lubricants' core product lines.

"The company's owners concluded that our niche brands, which have a long history and loyal customer base, would be better able to grow as part of the Acrotech family. Acrotech is an entrepreneurial and progressive-thinking group that can inject new energy into the product lines," said Master Lubricants vice president, Ken Kunz.

"Bywater's industry experience, network of contacts, and M&A skill set provided us with the solution we needed to get the deal done," said Kunz. "We couldn't have made this happen without their support."

"This is a great example of how, even in today's difficult business environment, deals can get done if the right team and right focus are in place," says principal of Bywater CDS, Kevin Fiala. "It was critical for us to identify a buyer that could capitalize on synergies with Master Lubricants."

Acrotech president Bruce Moncrieff said, "Greases comprise approximately 85 percent of sales under the Lubriko and Moly-XL brands. We wanted to acquire them because Acrotech produces complementary products for similar markets -- agriculture, general industrial distributors, auto transportation and bakery. We expect to add more synergistic product lines like Master Lubricants' to our company in the near future."
